CHOLERA

Is Checked in Tokio by Cool Weather but Still Spreads at Osaka, Japan.

(BY ASSOCIATED PRESS) TOKIO, Nov. 11.—Although cool weather has brought a decrease of cholera at Tokio the malady continues to spread at Osaka. Up to October 10 the cases at Tokio had reached 548; at Osaka the total was 2,001, with an increase of twenty daily.

At Tokio there have been 151 deaths. The authorities believe that by the end of the month the epidemic will be entirely wiped out here. No foreigner has been attacked by the disease, so far as is known.

The spread of cholera to Korea has had a serious economic effect there as the authorities have prohibited fishing in a zone extending along 200 miles of coast. Cholera is believed by many physicians to be easily circulated from fish tissue and the fishermen of Korea are said to have failed to comply with sanitary measures ordered by the health department. Some 270,000 fishermen, commanding 40,000 boats, are thus thrown out of work at the most fruitful fishing period of the year. Fear of fish as a microbe carrier has reduced the consumption of fish throughout the Japanese empire and the next to rice, is the chief food of the people the ban placed upon it has caused misery among both fisherman and distributor.

FRENCH SEEK TO BUILD UP
THEIR TRADE

Will Encourage Heaving Outgoing Freight from the Ports of France.

(Correspondence of Associated Press) PARIS, Nov. 11.—"Lack of outgoing freight was what ailed the French merchant marine before the war," says Maurice Ajam, deputy for the department of the Sarthe and former under secretary for the merchant marine. "Outgoing freight—heavy freight—is the only permanent cure for that ailment; the remedy will be furnished by the issue of the war."

"Five million tons of steel and iron from the valley of the Moselle," he declares to the Associated Press, "will be added to our exportation, since the least that France will get out of the war will be its old provinces of Alsace and Lorraine with the iron deposits that Germany took from us in 1871."

"The Frenchman is a stay-at-home," says M. Ajam, "and we can't give to our lines the revenue German ships derive from the emigrant trade. We can and will give them products and manufactures in place of live freight. At least we can give them a larger proportion of our own current carrying trade that went to foreign ships before the war."

The significance of M. Ajam's reference appears from figures showing that France paid 1,085,000,000 francs to foreign ships and 345,000,000 to French lines in 1915. The balance of seven hundred and forty million francs has had more weight in the argument for a greater merchant marine than years of propaganda. Both the government and parliament propose immediate action but they are not yet agreed as to what action.

Statistics collected by the Moniteur De La Flotte, the leading French maritime journal, show that the part of the French marine in the exterior commerce of France had fallen to thirty per cent in 1895 and to twenty-four per cent in 1915. In the meantime the general freight traffic of the country had gone from fifteen tons in 1880 to forty-five million tons in 1915.

French lines carried more and more freight, but considered in comparison to the development of French foreign trade, its proportionate share became less and less. The unusual circumstances developing from the war changed the situation and increased the part of French bottoms to thirty per cent in 1915, but the Moniteur De La Flotte estimates that, as a result of remarkable increases in imports during this year, the share of French ships will have dropped again to about twenty-five per cent; in other words, foreign ships are bringing to France three-quarters of all the products and manufacturers that it imports. France will have expended for the year 1916, at the present rate, three billion francs for ocean transportation, of which two and a half billion will go to foreign bottoms, reducing the share of French lines to twenty per cent.

M. Ajam proposes in a bill just introduced in the chamber of deputies, the construction of merchant ships, to the aggregate of 500,000 tons burden. He demands that in view of the magnitude of the task of restoring and developing the merchant fleet, the first initiative be confined to the government and that the ships be put on the stocks at once, to be sold subsequently to steamship lines on the most favorable terms possible.

The merchant marine committee of the chamber proposes loans aggregating 160 million francs, at six per cent interest, to shipping companies acceptable to the minister of marine for the purpose of buying or constructing steamships, of this sum fifty million francs would be reserved for colonial service and fifty millions to French shipbuilders.

The best information obtainable indicates that between fifty thousand and sixty thousand tons of merchant ships have been built since the war began, although most of the shipyards are employed manufacturing war material. Merchant vessels bought abroad to fly the French flag at the end of hostilities aggregate 150 thousand tons, while from the German fleet seized in Portuguese ports vessels aggregating 60,000 tons have been attributed to France, making a total of 260,000 tons to be added to the fleet as it existed before the war. From this should be deducted vessels through the work of submarines to the aggregate of 147,000 tons, leaving a net gain, according to semi-official figures of 113,000 tons.

M. Ajam contests the accuracy of these figures, and is of the opinion that if there will have been any net increase in the tonnage of French merchant ships at the end of the war, it will not reach 50,000 tons.
